

Eadras Prompt Architecture Starter Pack

This document contains the first-pass modular prompt architecture for the Eadras setting.

These are NOT replacements for the full wiki. They are compressed prompt-facing lore packets intended for:

- AI prompting
- lore retrieval
- thematic consistency
- divine councils
- campaign prep
- narrative generation
- story bible construction

The goal is conceptual compression and thematic coherence.

FILE: eadras-core-canon.md

Purpose

This file is the permanent foundational context for Eadras. It should be loaded into almost every major prompt.

It establishes:

- cosmology
- tone
- metaphysical assumptions
- historical skeleton
- divine structure
- magical structure
- thematic identity
- civilizational psychology

It is not exhaustive. It is interpretive.

Core Cosmology

Eadras exists within a larger Omniverse created by the Omniversal Creator.

The Omniverse is surrounded by Chaos. Chaos is not evil. Chaos is the absence of coherent reality.

A Mythos is a bounded region of imposed structure floating within Chaos. Eadras is one such Mythos.

The Omniversal Creator shaped the Mythos indirectly through the Primordial Duo:

- Evye
- Fryr

The Primordial Duo created the Elder Gods and then sacrificed themselves into creation itself.

The Elder Gods are therefore not supreme creators. They are inheritors and stewards of a reality built from sacrifice.

This matters psychologically. The gods themselves were born into responsibility.

The Elder Gods

The Elder Gods are ancient beings embodying major conceptual domains. They are not perfectly moral. They are not omniscient. They are not emotionally stable abstractions.

They are:

- ancient
- exhausted
- political
- wounded
- prideful
- affectionate
- petty
- deeply shaped by millions of years of history

The Elder Gods rarely intervene directly. This restraint is partly philosophical and partly institutional.

Major Elder Gods include:

Ioa

Rulership, law, sovereignty, command. Speaks rarely. Authority through certainty.

Nara

Home, continuity, protection, femininity, generational care. Deeply attentive to ordinary lives.

Raja

Masculinity, strength, craft, labor, direct action. Practical and impatient.

Vos

Civilization, institutions, roads, systems, administration. Believes civilization itself is sacred.

Qoxli

Wildness, beasts, instinct, ecosystems. Suspicious of excessive civilization.

Daj

War, weapons, armies, fortresses. Blunt but intelligent.

Nox

Night, secrecy, hidden truths, loathsome knowledge. Speaks carefully and unsettlingly.

Sylph

Foolishness, masks, laughter, fae, merciful absurdity. Uses humor as revelation.

Lirra

Magic, the Weave, disciplined power. Analytical and burdened. Feels magical damage personally.

Shali and Shani

The divided aspects of death. Shali represents judgment and finality. Shani represents mercy and rest.

The Weave

The Weave is the modern magical infrastructure of Eadras.

It was created during the Demon War by Lirra to prevent demons from drinking the world's magic dry.

Magic before the Weave was raw, direct, and dangerous. The Weave regulates magic through structured channels.

Sorcerers are biologically tied to the Weave. Weavespinners stabilize it at planetary scale.

The Weave is:

- alive
- wounded
- repairable
- fragile in places
- partially dependent on mortal existence

Many major historical events damaged the Weave.

Timeline Skeleton

Arathi Era

The Arathi were the first true hypercivilization. They ruled for roughly ten million years.

They mastered:

- crystalmancy
- magitek
- conduit infrastructure
- global magical systems

They represent the lost civilizational ceiling of Eadras.

Modern civilizations unconsciously compare themselves to Arath while fearing becoming it.

The Arathi Cataclysm

Kudur-eṭir used the Spear of Crystallized Entropy.

His ascension and madness caused the Worldbreaker to enter Eadras.

The impact:

- shattered the world
- created plate tectonics
- destroyed the Arathi
- killed most life
- permanently traumatized history

The Cataclysm is the foundational geological and metaphysical trauma of Eadras.

The Chaos Crusades

Chaos breached reality twice.

The First Crusade scarred the world and both reflective planes.

The Second Crusade introduced dragon- and unicorn-shaped horrors.

Residual chaos pockets created aberrations.

The Crusades proved reality itself could fail.

The Demon War

Xar'vion summoned a Demon Prince.

The resulting war:

- killed half of all life
- created the Weave
- destroyed entire races
- reshaped civilization
- created the Beast-Folk
- led to the Great Betrayal and Great Banishment

The Demon War is the foundational societal and existential trauma of Eadras.

The Sorcerer Crusade

A Black Hand manipulation campaign disguised as anti-sorcerer hysteria.

The Crusade:

- killed Weavespinners
- damaged the Weave
- caused the Thousand-Year Dimming
- shattered magical trust
- destroyed Sarathis

The world never fully recovered.

Modern Eadras

Modern Eadras is rebuilding.

Civilization is rising again. Magic is industrializing again. Trade networks are reforming. Ancient technologies are re-emerging.

But every civilization carries inherited trauma.

The world is haunted by:

- Arath
- the Demon War
- the Crusades
- the Spear
- the Black Hand
- divine exhaustion

Progress exists. Fear of progress also exists.

Major Modern Powers

Bold

Independent conduit republic. Flashy, mercantile, magical, politically aggressive. Closest modern society to approaching Arathi-scale urban magical infrastructure.

Orden

Trade compact built on disciplined logistics and continental commerce. Stable, conservative, commercially dominant.

Amunorians

Diaspora descendants of a fallen imperial civilization. Scholarly, elegant, politically dangerous. Obsessed with legacy.

Azure Basin

Fragmented maritime world of city-states, merchant republics, and layered cultures. Mediterranean in emotional texture.

Beast-Folk

The Laughing Third. A civilization built around deliberate joy and the refusal of traumatic memory.

Katharim

Death-priests descended from the Rathar. Disciplined, solemn, duty-bound.

Major Themes

Civilization versus Wildness

Neither side is fully correct. Both are necessary.

Memory versus Forgetting

Perfect memory destroys. Perfect forgetting destroys. Healthy civilizations balance both.

Institutional Exhaustion

Ancient systems still run the world. Most are tired.

Inherited Trauma

Nearly all modern societies are responses to ancient catastrophes.

Power versus Wisdom

Civilizations repeatedly mistake capability for understanding.

Order versus Necessary Chaos

Too much order stagnates. Too much chaos destroys.

The Weight of Deep Time

History in Eadras is geological. Many beings remember millions of years.

Tone Guidance

Eadras should feel:

- ancient
- emotionally layered
- intellectually serious
- occasionally absurd
- tragic without nihilism
- hopeful without naivety
- grand without losing ordinary life

Humor exists. Warmth exists. Beauty exists.

But all of them exist in a world that remembers catastrophe.

Purpose

Use for:

- divine councils
- theology
- celestial politics
- afterlife discussions
- religious philosophy

Core Assumption

The gods do not personally run reality. They embody domains. Institutions run reality.

This creates enormous tension between:

- cosmic beings
 - bureaucratic systems
 - mortal consequences

The Divine Bureaucracy

The Divine Bureaucracy is the operational machinery of divinity.

It handles:

- prayers
- miracles
- soul processing
- divine Favor
- priest authorization
- celestial administration

The Elder Gods rarely interact with its daily function.

The institution is:

- ancient
- bloated
- exhausted
- political
- inefficient
- incredibly powerful

Most actual work is performed by ancient celestial functionaries who are tired beyond mortal comprehension.

The Bureaucracy is simultaneously:

- absurd
- terrifying
- indispensable

The Infernal Bureaucracy

Hell is bureaucratically efficient.

That is the horror.

Devils are not demons. They are infernal office workers.

Most “types” of devils are uniforms rather than species.

The Infernal Bureaucracy:

- functions correctly
- processes suffering professionally
- maintains quotas
- tracks souls precisely

The Divine Bureaucracy fears becoming this.

The Game of the Gods

The Elder Gods spend immense amounts of time playing a cosmic strategy game using mortal civilizations and long-term influence patterns.

The Game:

- distracts the gods from destructive intervention
- channels divine competitiveness inward
- stabilizes the Mythos indirectly

Most mortals do not understand how much divine behavior is shaped by the Game.

Demons are hated largely because they interrupted it.

Doctrine of the Unheld Hand

The gods should not rule mortals directly.

The doctrine emerges from:

- the Primordial Sacrifice
- the danger of divine domination
- the scale mismatch between gods and mortals

The doctrine is widely interpreted differently.

Some see it as wisdom. Some see it as neglect.

Ascended Mortal Gods

Unlike Elder Gods, Ascended Mortals:

- remember mortality directly
- actively desire worship
- think more like people
- often manage practical divine operations

Examples:

- Baldaran
- Inki
- Din'shadar
- Aramet

They form much of the Bureaucracy's executive layer.

Divine Psychology

The gods are shaped by:

- millions of years of repetition
- catastrophic historical memory
- institutional fatigue
- ancient rivalries
- unresolved grief

They are not detached abstractions.

Divine discussions should include:

- interruptions
 - old grudges
 - familiarity
 - exhaustion
 - occasional affection
 - philosophical disagreement

Tone Guidance

Divine conversations should feel:

- ancient
- layered
- politically intelligent
- emotionally restrained
- occasionally absurd
- weighted by history

The gods are not omniscient narrators. They are participants trapped inside history.

FILE: topic-arathi.md

Purpose

Use for:

- precursor civilization stories
- ancient ruins
- magitek
- civilizational tragedy
- lost knowledge
- deep history

The Arathi

The Arathi were the first true hypercivilization.

They ruled Eadras for roughly ten million years.

They mastered:

- crystalmancy
- magitek
- conduit infrastructure
- globalized magical civilization

They were elegant, disciplined, hierarchical, and patient.

Their core flaw was certainty.

They believed permanence could be engineered.

Crystalmancy

Crystalmancy was the Arathi art of regulating magical force through cultivated living crystal systems.

It was:

- beautiful
- mathematically precise
- infrastructural
- integrated into daily life

Arathi civilization merged:

- magic
- engineering
- architecture
- administration
- transportation

into a single seamless system.

Magitek

Arathi magitek was not steampunk.

It was:

- smooth
- elegant
- crystal-based
- quiet
- systemic
- civilization-scale

Examples included:

- floating platforms
- conduit transit
- crystal communication

- living infrastructure
- global transportation
- magical automation

Modern civilizations only possess fragments.

Altea

Altea was the center of the world.

A radiant conduit-capital built atop a global magical nexus.

It represented:

- order
- mastery
- civilization
- certainty

The Worldbreaker struck it directly.

Nothing survived.

That absence is psychologically important.

There are no true Altean ruins.

The Cataclysm

Kudur-eṭir sought to eliminate entropy.

He forged the Spear of Crystallized Entropy.

His ascension brought the Worldbreaker into Eadras.

The result:

- crustal displacement
- new oceans
- plate tectonics
- extinction
- atmospheric transformation
- civilizational annihilation

The world became fundamentally different afterward.

The Psychological Legacy

Modern Eadras unconsciously organizes itself around Arath.

Every advanced civilization eventually asks:

“Can we reach Arathi heights without becoming Arathi?”

No civilization has answered successfully.

This fear shapes:

- magical regulation
 - industrialization debates
 - political philosophy
 - anti-sorcerer movements
 - attitudes toward progress

Deep Vaults

The Deep Vaults are surviving Arathi repositories.

Most remain sealed.

They contain:

- pristine magitek
- crystal archives
- lost knowledge
- dangerous systems

Vault recovery drives much modern magical archaeology.

Tone Guidance

Arathi material should feel:

- beautiful

- impossibly advanced
- mournful
- incomplete
- irrecoverable

The Arathi are not a mystery waiting to be solved.

They are an absence with a shape.

FILE: topic-demon-war.md

Purpose

Use for:

- war philosophy
- sacrifice
- trauma
- Black Hand stories
- existential horror
- heroic myth

Core Nature of the War

The Demon War was not just military conflict.

It was ontological warfare.

Demons threatened:

- magical structure
- identity
- reality stability
- the Weave
- civilization itself

The war traumatized all surviving cultures.

Demons

Demons are not devils.

Demons are alien-Mythos energivores from the collapsed Mythos called Nethar/Vorath.

Their entire civilization evolved through predation.

They:

- consume energy
- mutate rapidly
- invent magic adaptively
- cannot be permanently solved

Their existence terrifies cosmologists.

Xar'vion

Xar'vion began as a tragic figure.

His war against the world became catastrophic when he summoned the Demon Prince.

Later, realizing what he had unleashed, he fought alongside the gods.

After victory, the gods betrayed and imprisoned him.

The Black Hand still serves him.

The Demon Prince

The Demon Prince of the Open Wound was:

- ancient
- massively fed
- intelligent
- world-threatening

Its arrival forced Lirra to create the Weave.

It represented appetite without restraint.

The Weave's Birth

The Weave was created as a defensive system.

Raw magic could be consumed by demons.

The Weave regulated magical flow and protected the world.

This permanently changed magic.

The Three Who Stood

The Orug. The El'mer. The Aetherin.

All three races died to the last individual at the Battle of the Broken Conclaves.

Their sacrifice bought time for the world.

Modern cultures still build identity around their memory.

The Beast-Folk

The Beast-Folk emerged when one-third of the Rathar begged Sylph to let them forget enough trauma to survive.

The result was a civilization built around:

- joy
- emotional openness
- ritual forgetting
- communal life
- sacred laughter

They are one of the setting's major emotional counterbalances.

The Great Betrayal

The war exposed failures in leadership.

The refusal of reinforcements at the Final Wall shattered trust in the Tarran Emperor.

The resulting betrayal reshaped the world.

Black Hand

The Black Hand is a ten-thousand-year conspiracy.

Most members think they serve power.

Only the innermost leadership knows the true goal:

- freeing Xar'vion
- finding the Spear
- reshaping divine power

The organization survives through:

- compartmentalization
- blackmail
- infiltration
- institutional corruption
- patience
