Purpose

Use for:

- existential war stories
- divine trauma
- Black Hand lore
- sacrifice narratives
- postwar philosophy
- Beast-Folk origins
- Weave creation
- heroic tragedy

This file focuses on the Demon War and its aftermath.

It should usually be paired with:

Core Assumption

The Demon War is the foundational societal trauma of modern Eadras.

The Arathi Cataclysm broke the world physically.

The Demon War broke civilizations psychologically.

Nearly every modern culture is a response to the Demon War.

Nature of the War

The Demon War was not merely military conflict.

It was ontological warfare.

Demons threatened:

- magical structure

- identity stability
- metaphysical continuity
- civilization itself
- the future of the Weave

The war reshaped what existence felt like.

Demons

Demons are alien-Mythos energivores.

They come from the collapsed Mythos called:

- Nethar
- Vorath

Their civilization consumed its own planes until only a hellish Prime remained.

Demons evolved through:

- predation
- adaptation
- magical consumption
- survival pressure

They:

- feed on energy
- mutate rapidly
- invent magic dynamically
- destabilize coherent systems

They are not devils.

The Demon Prince

The Demon Prince of the Open Wound was:

- ancient
- massively fed
- hyper-adaptive
- catastrophically dangerous

Xar'vion summoned it during desperation.

He believed he could control it.

He was wrong.

The Prince represented appetite without restraint.

Xar'vion

Xar'vion was not originally a simple villain.

He began as:

- brilliant
- ambitious
- grief-driven
- increasingly isolated

The Demon War transformed him into a world-scale threat.

Later, realizing what he had unleashed, he fought alongside the gods.

After victory:

- the gods betrayed him
- imprisoned him in his Icon
- erased him from legitimate history

The Black Hand still works to free him.

The Weave's Creation

The Weave was created by Lirra during the war.

Before the Weave:

- magic was raw
- demons could drink it directly
- magical systems were unstable under demonic pressure

The Weave:

- regulated magical flow
- prevented direct magical predation

- permanently transformed spellcasting

The Weave is therefore:

- a defensive system
 - a scar
 - a compromise
 - a survival adaptation

Sorcerers and Weavespinners

Sorcerers are biologically tied to the Weave.

Weavespinners stabilize it.

This relationship is mostly secret.

The death of Weavespinners can physically damage magical reality.

This fact becomes central later during the Sorcerer Crusade.

The Three Who Stood

Three engineered races held the Final Wall:

- the Orug
- the El'mer
- the Aetherin

All three races died completely.

Their stand bought enough time for the world to survive.

Modern cultures mythologize them intensely.

Their sacrifice represents:

- loyalty
- courage
- tragic duty
- impossible endurance

The phrase:

"We held anyway."

is culturally sacred across much of Eadras.

The Great Betrayal

The failure to reinforce the Final Wall shattered confidence in Tarran leadership.

The resulting betrayal changed the war's political trajectory.

This event ultimately contributed to:

- the Great Banishment
 - fragmentation of older alliances
 - the rise of modern civilizations

The Beast-Folk

The Beast-Folk emerged from trauma.

One-third of the Rathar begged Sylph to let them forget enough pain to survive.

Sylph answered. Qoxli assisted.

The result was the Laughing Third.

The Beast-Folk built an entire civilization around:

- joy
- emotional openness
- communal life
- sacred absurdity
- refusal to let memory become tyranny

Their laughter is philosophical. Not naive.

The Demonfall Marches

The first great breach opened here.

The region remains:

- unstable
- scarred
- heavily warded
- culturally fragmented

Beast-Folk communities often guard the region.

Demonic remnants still exist.

Black Hand

The Black Hand survived the war.

Most members believe they serve:

- power
- continuity
- influence
- hidden knowledge

Only the innermost leadership knows the true goal:

- free Xar'vion
- locate the Spear
- reshape divine power

The organization survives through:

- compartmentalization
 - infiltration
 - blackmail
 - patience
 - institutional corruption

The War's Lasting Effects

The Demon War permanently changed:

- religion
- magical regulation
- politics

- psychology
- race relations
- attitudes toward sorcery

Most modern institutions are responses to its consequences.

The war is still culturally alive.

Theological Consequences

The war damaged trust in:

- divine restraint
- magical safety
- institutional stability

It also produced:

- new martyr traditions
- anti-demonic doctrine
- deep suspicion of uncontrolled magic
- cultural reverence for sacrifice

The gods themselves were traumatized.

They hate demons partly because demons forced them to abandon their routines and intervene directly.

Tone Guidance

Demon War material should feel:

- tragic
- mythic
- emotionally exhausted
- heroic without triumphalism
- existentially dangerous

Victory in the Demon War was survival. Not restoration.

No one truly “won.”

Narrative Guidance

Good Demon War stories emphasize:

- sacrifice
- survival
- moral compromise
- institutional failure
- emotional aftermath
- civilizations adapting to catastrophe

The war should feel:

- remembered
- inherited
- unresolved

Modern Eadras still lives inside its shadow.
